Poet's Day is August 21st!

Poetry Day is all about paying tribute to the great art of poetry. It's about embracing poetry, enjoying it, and even creating it. Whether you prefer to read poetry from an acclaimed writer or you like to be the creative one; it doesn't matter. It is about celebrating this literary form in every way.

Poetry Day was founded by William Sieghart in 1994. He is a British philanthropist, entrepreneur, and publisher. He also founded Forward Prizes for Poetry. This is a major award ceremony for poetry, which is presented once a year. He said the following about the occasion:

"There are millions of talented poets out there and it's about time they got some recognition for their work. They shouldn't be embarrassed about reading their work out aloud. I want people to read poetry on the bus on their way to work, in the street, in school and in the pub."

And isn't this true, there are so many people who are talented, yet they don't feel like they have a voice or they are scared to show off their true poetry skills. So, let's encourage everyone to do so!

Poet's day is dedicated to the long history of poetry in the world, and most especially to those who fill our world with the passion and wonder that flows from the tip of their pens.

Of course, you don't have to write poems yourself; you can spend the day reading some great poetry as well. Famous poets that are well worth looking into include Maya Angelou, Robert Frost, John Keats, and William Wordsworth. A good place to start is with William Shakespeare. Today, thanks to the Internet, it is easier than ever to get access to poems. You don't have to search via the author either. You can search based on a theme such as love. If you find a poem that really interests you, why not share it with a friend and celebrate Poet's Day together?
